gramming a whole lifetime into twenty minutes.

He was excellently supported by Elsie Mackay as the pantomimist's wife, Manart Klippen and others in a capable company, which numbered more than the single additional performer that the phrase "and company" usually signifies in vaudeville.

Max Hart Says 'Trust' Destroyed His Business.

For the third time since 1915 suit was instituted yesterday in the United States District Court against the so-called "vaudeville trust" when Max Hartzel, under the Sherman law for $5,250,000, charged the B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange and its defendants on charges that they operated an absolute monopoly in restraint of trade of what is known as the "big time vaudeville" and have through their actions destroyed his business.

Judge John C. Knox, hearing the case, overruled the exceptions taken to the findings of William Parkin, special master in the case, and ordered the defendants to answer interrogatories. When Hartzel had asked questions of H. Axman, counsel for Hart, asked the court to sustain the findings of the special master and told Judge Knox that the domination of the defendants is so complete that there is not a theater throughout the length and breadth of the land playing big time vaudeville by them."

A black and white illustration of a steam locomotive pulling a passenger train. The locomotive is in the foreground, moving towards the viewer, with smoke or steam coming from its smokestack. The train is on tracks that recede into the distance. To the right of the tracks, there is a signpost with several horizontal signs. The entire illustration is enclosed in a rounded rectangular frame. Below the illustration, there is a copyright notice.
